White Women Show Stronger Support for Democratic Ticket than in 2004; Gender Gaps Remain in National and Battleground State Polls

Last update: 6:14 p.m. EDT Oct. 31, 2008

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., Oct 31, 2008 /PRNewswire-USNewswire via COMTEX/ -- National presidential polls find white women either evenly divided between the presidential candidates or favoring Senator Obama, according to the Center for American Women and Politics (CAWP). This marks a shift from the 2004 presidential election, when the exit polls from Edison Media Research/Mitofsky International found that 55 percent of white women voted for President Bush and 44 percent for Senator Kerry.

"This shift in support among white women from 2004 to 2008 is one reason Obama is faring better than Senator Kerry did in the last election," observes CAWP director Debbie Walsh.

A gender gap is evident among white voters, as it is among voters overall. In recent national polls, gender gaps among white women range from 3 to 12 percentage points, depending on the particular poll, with white women more likely than white men to support Senator Obama.

To hear a recording of an audio press conference on these findings, go to http://www.ccmcfles.org/cawp/10-30-08\_CAWP\_call.mp3.

There is no notable gender difference among black voters; polls have consistently shown that about nine of every ten black voters - women and men - support Obama.

The Center's latest review of polls is part of Women's Vote Watch, a weekly look at the women's vote in the 2008 presidential election. Polling data can be found at www.cawp.rutgers.edu/WomensVoteWatch.

Battleground States: CAWP also continues to track the gender gap in key battleground states as the list of closely contested states keeps shifting over time. In recent polls in nine battleground states - Colorado, Florida, Indiana, Nevada, North Carolina, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Virginia - gender gaps of varying sizes are apparent, all in the same direction, with women supporting Senator Obama by larger margins than men. The gender gaps in these critical battleground states mirror the gender gap evident in national polls, with women more likely than men to support Obama.

Women in the battleground states not only support Obama by larger margins than men, but also show a consistent preference for Obama over McCain in the vast majority of recent polls. The picture with men is more mixed; sometimes - in some states in some polls - men break for McCain, sometimes a majority of men support Obama, and sometimes they are about evenly divided between the two candidates.

"If Obama does well in most of these battleground states on Tuesday, he will do so in large part because of the votes of women," according to CAWP senior scholar Susan J. Carroll.
