Women's Vote Watch: Women's Votes Could Determine Election Outcome Women Are a Clear Majority of Voters

Significant gender gaps in most polls this year – with women more likely than men to favor the Democratic ticket – mean a heavy turnout among women could make the difference in a close election, according to the Center for American Women and Politics (CAWP). The review of voting rates since 1964 is part of Women's Vote Watch, a weekly look at the women's vote in the 2008 presidential election.

Women have voted at higher rates than men in every presidential election since 1980, and the number of women voters has exceeded the number of men voting in every presidential election since 1964, according to U.S. Bureau of the Census statistics. Women outnumber men among registered as well as actual voters.

In 2004, registered voters numbered 72.4 million women and 63.4 million men. With new voter registrations at an all time high in 2008, there are indications that women may be registering at higher rates than men in this election cycle, thereby adding to the advantage women have over men among potential voters. A May 2008 survey of state election officials by the Associated Press found that in the six states that collected voter data by gender, comparing 2008 with 2004, the registration rate for new voters was up 89 percent among women, compared with 74 percent among men.

In 2004, 8.8 million more women than men voted, according to official figures from the U.S. Bureau of the Census. Based on past patterns and the data about new registrants, women voters could easily outnumber male voters by more than 9 million in the 2008 election.

"It is not surprising that the presidential campaigns are paying unprecedented attention to women voters this year," observes Susan J. Carroll, senior scholar at the Center for American Women and Politics. "Women are a clear majority of the electorate and may play a pivotal role in the outcome of the election."

Women outvoted men in 2004 (in terms of both turnout rates and actual numbers) in every racial and ethnic group—African American, Latino, Asian/Pacific Islander, and white – and among voters under the age of 65.
